PACIFIC COAST AIR MUSEUM

It has not been lost on any of us that we, as a community, have been and continue to be under tremendous stress. To help alleviate some of this stress and to give you something fun and outdoorsy to do to celebrate the easing of stay-at-home orders, the Pacific Coast Air Museum, an open-air museum, will open its outdoor exhibits only, beginning Wednesday June 10th, from 10:00 am to 4:00 pm, in full compliance with both state and local mandates. Visitors will need face coverings to enter and must observe social distancing protocols and avoid large groups of six or more.

Come on out, bring the kids and enjoy Sonoma County's fresh summer air while learning about some of the aviation history of our country and viewing some of the aircraft that helped ensure our freedom. Docents will be on hand to tell you all about the aircraft and answer your questions.

The Pacific Coast Air Museum will resume its normal summer schedule and will open all indoor exhibits when advised we can safely do so. In the meantime, we look forward to welcoming you back! Please visit our website <https://pacificcoastairmuseum.org/> for further details.

Please remember to stay safe. As a community, we will get through this together.

The Pacific Coast Air Museum is a tax exempt organization under section 501(c) of the IRS code. The museum's tax ID number is 68-0216262.
